Now if there are those that oppose the amendment, no doubt, that will raise some thoughts in some other people's minds as to why they don't want to make it free and clear and very specific as to what it does. Could be that it would cost some legal fees or something. But if you do it this way, there is no question, that if you define them as such, they are going to be taxed as real estate and I want to make sure that that is in that bill, and I can't imagine anybody disagreeing with that concept unless there are subtleties and things to hide which I have not been able to filter out of the rhetoric that has gone before.
